Media Guidelines Policy

AIMSE conference registration materials clearly state that executive recruiters, consultants and members of the "working press" are not eligible for AIMSE membership and therefore ineligible to attend AIMSE conferences. AIMSE conferences are not media events and therefore the organization does not issue media passes to any conference or event. AIMSE does recognize investment trade publications as useful tools to the investment management sales and marketing services profession and encourages participation by such organizations as associate members. In accordance with this stated policy, associate AIMSE members of these investment trade publications must comply with the statements of the policy to remain in good standing as members.

AIMSE conferences are off-the-record, to enable members and panelists to speak more candidly than they may when their comments might end up in print, possibly with their organizational affiliation listed as well. The presence of the press could impede open discussion during these educational sessions. AIMSE members as well as guest speakers have expressed this concern. The free exchange of ideas is a vital part of AIMSE. The attendance of "working press" could have a dampening effect on open discussion.

Members of the media are, of course, free to interview participants outside of AIMSE conference sessions, as long as they clearly identify themselves and indicate that the participant may be quoted in print.

Discussions occurring in AIMSE conference sessions are off the record out of respect for personal and corporate policies over public attribution. It is up to each attendee and/or speaker whether he or she wishes (his or her own) statements made in the course of a session to be quoted in the media.

In the course of the customary self-introductions at the outset of each conference session, the moderator will ask if any such person is in attendance, and if so, out of fairness, will insist on compliance with the off the record rule.
